

Did you know?

Teen pregnancy is linked to a number of important social issues such as poverty, educational achievement, health issues, responsible fatherhood, single parenthood, overall child well-being, and other risky behaviors. In addition, there are substantial taxpayer implications associated with teen childbearing. Consequently, tackling the issue of teen sexual health is not just a reproductive health issue, but should be viewed as a mission to improve all of these measures.

The Navajo County Teen Pregnancy Prevention Program collaborates with school districts and community organizations to present information to teens in small groups or classroom settings in a fast-paced and engaging format to educate teens about the risks associated with early sexual activity—including unplanned pregnancy and sexually transmitted infections.

Sessions for parents of teens are also offered to equip parents with information on teen behavior trends and influences, as well as tips on how to communicate effectively with teens. Contact Program Manager Rosalva Zimmerman (928) 524-4750, ext. 5532 to find out more or to schedule a presentation for your group.
